Then an article caught my eye: "How Running Every Day for 250 Days (and Counting) Has Changed My Life." Inspired, I decided to try a run streak: at least one mile a day for 40 days. The short distance and time-limited nature of a streak appealed to me: A mile was roughly 10 minutes, so I could never claim I didn't have time.

Running has definitely changed my life. Who am I kidding? It probably saved it too. The last few decades as I've gotten back into running I've seen my perspective on CF change. I used to see running as a way to try and escape cystic fibrosis. Now I don't worry as much about CF chasing me. I worry about chasing my own dreams.

My stamina was synonymous with my life at the time — it was bad, but I knew it would be better if I kept running. If I would fight against the wind, rain, cold, and my thoughts of giving up, I would eventually improve my stamina and be a better runner. My life has improved at the same rate that my running pace and stamina has improved.

My life now came into focus. I had always wanted to use the platform my gifts gave me to make a difference in the lives of others, especially in my home country. 20. Running down My Dream. When I run, I feel set free from the world. I liked the sound of that. I wanted my degree, which is what made this decision so difficult.

My Notes: Running for My Life by Lopez Lomong

Running reminds me that there's more to life than my diagnosis. There's more to life than a number on the screen of my CGM. Running is a tool that I use to keep my mind clear so that I can get the most out of each day, get the most out of my body, and give myself a positive outlet for the anxiety that builds up over time.
